OF RIVERFRONT TRIANGLE

PIT

ARLEE GROUP TO SUE DEQ OVER GRAVEL

OF RIVERFRONT TRIANGLE

Martin Kidston

The Garden hosts a Peace Festival every fall that could be jeopardized if the gravel pit goes into operation, according to the appeal. It adds that donations “will not only be helping to protect the Garden but will help give citizens a say in what the government does.”

The group, neighbors and the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes have tried to get the Department of Environmental Quality to reject the Riverside Contracting, Inc., application to build the Marvin Rehbein Asphalt Plant and Gravel Pit pending on land less than 3 miles north of Arlee.

Laura Lundquist

Missoula Current

For more information, please contact Laura Lundquist at lundquist@missoulacurrent.com.

ARLEE GROUP TO SUE DEQ OVER GRAVEL

OF RIVERFRONT TRIANGLE

Martin Kidston

The Garden hosts a Peace Festival every fall that could be jeopardized if the gravel pit goes into operation, according to the appeal. It adds that donations “will not only be helping to protect the Garden but will help give citizens a say in what the government does.”

The group, neighbors and the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes have tried to get the Department of Environmental Quality to reject the Riverside Contracting, Inc., application to build the Marvin Rehbein Asphalt Plant and Gravel Pit pending on land less than 3 miles north of Arlee.

Laura Lundquist

Missoula Current

For more information, please contact Laura Lundquist at lundquist@missoulacurrent.com.

NEW TEAM EXPLODING REDEVELOPMENT OF RIVERFRONT TRIANGLE

Martin Kidston

One local development team was set to break ground on the project in 2020, but the pandemic’s economic impacts killed the effort. A new team dubbed Capital V Partners stepped forward last April.

The city has asked the Missoula Economic Partnership to spearhead promoting the block’s potential and to contact any developers both interested and capable of redeveloping the property.

The GoFundMe site - “Buddha Garden Under Threat, Stop the Mine” - was created on behalf of Friends of the Jocko by supporters of the Garden of One Thousand Buddhas, which is affected by this project.

On May 8, Friends of the Jocko held a community meeting to update Arlee residents on the situation and learn what they thought.

Folks were pretty much unanimous that they are willing to challenge the DEQ on their decision to allow the pit to come to fruition this time around.

On Thursday, a GoFundMe campaign was created to raise money for litigation against the Department of Environmental Quality to reject the Riverside Contracting, Inc., application to build the Marvin Rehbein Asphalt Plant and Gravel Pit pending on land less than 3 miles north of Arlee.

Arlee residents are trying to raise money to take the next step in stopping a pending gravel pit project that threatens their watershed, wildlife, property values and standard of living.

The Garden hosts a Peace Festival every fall that could be jeopardized if the gravel pit goes into operation, according to the appeal. It adds that donations “will not only be helping to protect the Garden but will help give citizens a say in what the government does.”

The group, neighbors and the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes have tried to get the Department of Environmental Quality to reject the Riverside Contracting, Inc., application to build the Marvin Rehbein Asphalt Plant and Gravel Pit pending on land less than 3 miles north of Arlee.

Laura Lundquist

Missoula Current

For more information, please contact Laura Lundquist at lundquist@missoulacurrent.com.

NEW TEAM EXPLODING REDEVELOPMENT OF RIVERFRONT TRIANGLE

Martin Kidston

One local development team was set to break ground on the project in 2020, but the pandemic’s economic impacts killed the effort. A new team dubbed Capital V Partners stepped forward last April.

The city has asked the Missoula Economic Partnership to spearhead promoting the block’s potential and to contact any developers both interested and capable of redeveloping the property.

The GoFundMe site - “Buddha Garden Under Threat, Stop the Mine” - was created on behalf of Friends of the Jocko by supporters of the Garden of One Thousand Buddhas, which is affected by this project.

On May 8, Friends of the Jocko held a community meeting to update Arlee residents on the situation and learn what they thought.

Folks were pretty much unanimous that they are willing to challenge the DEQ on their decision to allow the pit to come to fruition this time around.

On Thursday, a GoFundMe campaign was created to raise money for litigation against the Department of Environmental Quality to reject the Riverside Contracting, Inc., application to build the Marvin Rehbein Asphalt Plant and Gravel Pit pending on land less than 3 miles north of Arlee.

Arlee residents are trying to raise money to take the next step in stopping a pending gravel pit project that threatens their watershed, wildlife, property values and standard of living.

The Garden hosts a Peace Festival every fall that could be jeopardized if the gravel pit goes into operation, according to the appeal. It adds that donations “will not only be helping to protect the Garden but will help give citizens a say in what the government does.”

The group, neighbors and the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes have tried to get the Department of Environmental Quality to reject the Riverside Contracting, Inc., application to build the Marvin Rehbein Asphalt Plant and Gravel Pit pending on land less than 3 miles north of Arlee.